As we head into the last week of the session how both sides come to a final solution for agreeing on a final supplemental budget will be the tough work needed to accomplish without having a special session.

For an overview of what is happening in Olympia and a good summary of how the different approaches and philosophies of the two sides is making the final solution difficult, if you are interested, I suggest you take the time to watch Rep. Dunshee and Sen. Dammeier discuss progress on supplemental budget negotiations on TVW's "Inside Olympia" show from this week. ( <https://t.co/cP079HqUsB> )

So, what does that mean for CTE funding of MSOC this session? I am sorry to say that without the passage of the four different bills that were proposed this year to restore CTE MSOC funding at a level to ensure CTE programs the chance of being in the final solution this year is not good.

But, that is not to diminish the value of CTE in the K-12 system. There are many more voices from around the state coming to the understanding of the importance of CTE for the success of students and the economy of our state.

All the hard work done this year by so many people in and out of the CTE community to have something happen is very disappointing to say the least! But, in the world of the legislative process, and it is a process, this means we need to start pivoting to what all of us can be doing during the interim.

There are many more industry associations, companies, individuals and political "think-tanks" coming to the understanding for the need to have high-quality CTE for all students in our state. Here are a few editorials and links that have shared their support for CTE. So, the coalition supporting CTE and the funding needed is growing and sharing their support through their actions and in the media.

Here are a couple of recent Op-Ed pieces in the news lately:

- Roundtable on record for the importance of career pathway learning
  - <http://thelens.news/2016/03/04/a-fail-for-washington-on-at-risk-k-12-students-but-there-are-fixes/>
- League of Education Voters support for CTE in Seattle Times
  - <http://www.seattletimes.com/opinion/fix-funding-shortfall-for-hands-on-vocational-learning/>

Join us for our next legislative update GoToMeeting at 6 PM on Monday by following this link <https://global.gotomeeting.com/join/383830093> to find out the latest and to join the discussion on what may be possible in the last week and going forward.

Thanks for all you do for CTE, your students, and your communities!

Tim
